In "Le Royaume" of June 1983 [no. 12, p. 5], Marie-Paule wrote:

All our faults and imperfections are defilements of our soul, hence the absolute necessity of interior reform, of conversion...

We must remember also that, if it is necessary that we work at correcting ourselves, it is also very necessary that we put much love in all we do.

Authentic love quickly transforms a life.

For converting means changing our conduct or the path being followed; it is turning away from what is evil to turn to God. It is a new direction being given to all our behavior.

Every day, we must sacrifice ourselves, give of ourselves. Therefore, we must convert every day, become like a little child depending on the Father. It is a constant effort to tend towards the summits where so many graces flood the loving soul.

But, all too often, the message of conversion comes up against our human self-sufficiency under so many forms, whereas turning to Christ the Redeemer, following in His footsteps in THAT LOVE WHICH IS GIVING, by imploring the help of Mary, His Mother, allows us to make giant strides in light and peace, in spite of the vicissitudes of this life.

Mother: Thus said the Lady.

Assembly: May she be blessed forever.
